Old Soldiers March in Parade in Honor of Those Who Fell in the Civil Strife.

Three steamboats, carrying several hundred veterans of the Civil War, moored to the landing at Jefferson Barracks yester-day afternoon. While a salute of seventeen guns was fired, these old veterans, with heads uncovered, marched ashere, to deco-rate the graves of their comrades.

The salute seemed like the greeting of the army of the new generation to the army of the old, and 5,000 persons witnessed the impressive sight.

Those old soldiers made an interesting picture as they marched to the officers' headquarters at the Barracks. Some of them were minus an arm, others had but them were minus an arm, ethers had but one, nearly all of them were gray, and all were bent in form and wrinkled in feature. Yesterday was an ideal Decoration Day. A soft breeze blew during the afternon and the trees and the grass in the National Cemetery were green. Long before the veterans arrived sympathetic persons had placed flowers on the graves of the departed beroes, and there were tears in the eyes of many a veteran as he looked at the hundreds and hundreds of graves and receiled the bitter strugglee. the bitter struggles.

was Rabbi Leon Harrison. His subject was:
"Remember the Days of Old." In part, he said:

"We remember the days of old as we gaze upon you, battle-scarred warriors who have caimly faced disease and devastation, whose baptism of fire has consecrated you as the national champions of liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable. We, the later-born, to whom your grim experiences are but history, salute you who have passed through the flery hall of shot and shell and deemed mutilation and death a cheap price to pay for freedom of the siave and the salvation of the country.

"Yes, we gaze upon you, whose hair is whitening, whose ranks are thinning swiftly now, and all the past comes back to mind; the days of fierce alarm, of burning indignation when a convulsion rent the land assunder and the columns of the Temple of Liberty tottered on their foundations. The days when fond mothers sent their unreturning sons away, when wives were widowed and children were orphaned, and streaming eyes wept for the iton-hearted ones who were not to return. Ah, their young liver were quenched, but not the glory of their fame that thrills and inspires us when we remember the days of old."

"And you have assembled for remembrance, to enshrine anew in your hearts and ours these immortal ones who have fallen at the post of duty. The matton halts to do them honor. All over the land on Memorial Day a stillness broods, the pulse of commerce does not beat, the hammer and anvil are silent, the giant wheels of industry are stopped. All these prosale people are steeped now in the poetry of recollection. With fragrant blossoms shall be covered the peaceful couches of those now and forever noncombatants. DID NOT PERISH IN VAIN. "They have perished not in vain. Their lives have not been a fruitiess sacrifice. Your struggles on the great dwelling ground of colossal combatants have not been wasted. You have achieved more than a military triumph, more than a passing glory.

"The nation undivided and undivisible, in-"The nation undivided and undivisible, indeed was saved, emancipation given to the bond, and the Republic vindicated at last by a freedom enjoyed alike by all."

The ceremonies at Jefferson Barracks were simple. After the veterans arrived, the regulars formed in procession and preceded the old soldiers to the National Cemetery. There, besides the speech of Rabbi Harrison, there was a possible of the contraint.

R. ritual by Martin Scherer, reading of President Lincoln's address at Gettysburg by Ford Smith, and a benediction by the Reverend Hezekiah Butler, a negro veteran, of Shaw Post.

Following these exercises the bugle call was sounded, the command was re-formed and the veterans went to the main division of the cemetery, where the graves of the dead were decorated with flowers.

BROADWAY CARS BLOCKED.

Spreading Rails Cause Inconvenience The spreading of a rail stopped traffic on the Broadway line near Jefferson Barracks yesterday afternoon. The accident occurred on the northbound track. Cars southbound arrived at Jefferson Barracks with regular ity, and by 5 o'clock, two hours after the accident, nearly every car on the line was stationed near the southern terminus, with poor prospect of an early start.

The memorial services at Jefferson Barracks were ended about 5 o'clock, just about the time the blockade occurred. Half an hour later about 6,000 persons were at the Barracks station eager to go home. The accident at the Barracks was not the first that befell the Broadway line yesterday. About 2 o'clock rails spread about half a mile north of the southern terminus. A few persons started to walk to the Barracks, but the majority remained on board. They reached the terminus of the road eventually, but when they did the Memorial services were practically over and a second rail had spread.

It was after 7 o'clock before the wrecking crews succeeded in fixing the track and the cars resumed their interrupted runs.

VISIT TOMB OF GEN. GRANT.

Pilgrims Appland Mention of Robert E. Lee as One of World's Greatest Soldiers.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL New York, May 30.—Mere than 10,000 per-sons attended the exercises at the tomb of General Grant. From the time the tomb was opened until after the exercises were concluded there was a steady stream pass-ing in and out, looking down upon the mar-ble sarcophagii, where rest the bodes of the great commander and his wife.

The exercises were conducted by U. S. Grant Post, No. 327. Just before the ceremonles began the converted cruiser Mayflower arrived in the North River, oppo-emonles began the converted cruiser Mayflewer arrived in the North River, opposite the tomb and fired the national salute of twenty-one guns.

Noah Tibbets, chairman of the Memorial Day Committee, introduced the Reverend S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., the orator of the day. Doctor Cadman sail:

"If there is a lesson standing out to-day more impressively than any other among the many which Decoration Day teaches us, it lies in the statement that the advent of the colored man in bondage in America, brought here, as he was, for the purpose of gain, has inflicted upon, our nation an appalling amount of bloodshed, and to-day the most thorny question in current politics or social life is the question of our colored people."

What was considered a remarkable incident was the applauding of the name of Robert E. Lee, whom the orator mentioned in his address as one of the great soldlers of the world.

Mrs. Cramer, a sister of General Grant, was escorted into the tomb by a committee of the post.

Laurence Weber Sustains Painful In-

Laurence Weber, the 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Weber of West Beileville, while fishing yesterday caught the hook of the line in his hose. After the hook was removed, Laurence begged for the fish which he thought he caught.

Laurence, with other boys, had been fishing in a pond near his home. He caught several large crappies when his cork went under with a jerk. He gave the line a hard jerk. The fish was lost and the hook caught in his nose. The other boys came to his assistance, but the more they tried to relieve him, the farther in the hook worked itself. Several doctors were summoned and the hook was cut out of the little fellow's nose.

New Owners to Continue Operation in Connection With Other Property.

Purchase of the property of the Bonne Terre Farming and Cattle Company by the St. Louis Dairy Company has caused a report that the latter is preparing to seek control of the dairy business in St. Louis

"The Bonne Terre plant was bought from the St. Joe Mining Company, which did not wish to continue in the dairy business," said Mr. Oabanne. "The dairy will be conducted just as it has always been, except, that in the future 2 will be under the control and management of the St. Louis Dairy Company.
"Notices have been sent to patrons of the Bonne Terre Company announcing the change. No mention is made of a combine or a proposition to antagonize competitors by a change of prices."

PIANO!

Then thoughts like these will chase themselves through your brain cells: "Yes, daughter or son must keep up his or her practice. The old piano is pretty well worn, action bad and it is out of date generally; what will I do it with? Oh, yes; Kleselhorst wants square pianos and secondhand up-rights now. He pays the highest price for them." Or perchance no kind of a piano is in your home. "Yes, we promised Mary or John a piano at vacation time, but where shall we buy? What make will it be?" Most naturally, two FAMOUS PIANOS will suggest themselves.
